I am a native of England, and while I was in that country I contracted a terrible blood poison, and for two years was under treatment as an out-door patient at Nottingham Hospital, England, but was not cured. I suffered the most agonizing paties in my bones, and was covered with sores all over my body and limbs. Finally I completely lost all hope in that country, and salled for America, and was treated at Roosevelt in this city, as well as by a prominent physician in Now York having no connection with the hospitals.

I saw the advertisement of Swift's Specific, and I determined to rive it a trial. I took six bottles, and I can say with great joy that they have cured use entirely. I am as sound and well as I ever was in my life.

BROUGHT BACK TO LIFE.

For two weeks I had been in a creole colony. Fifty dollars a month I was offered for my services, and as I had not an acquaintance in the country, I gladly accepted. That would bring me food, clething and shelter-more than I had been able to obtain in dear France. My two pupils, M. Rabut assured me, were well-behaved children. The girl was just 15, already a young lady, and the 10-year boy was equally apt at study. After all, I was only re quired to give five hours a day to teach ing. The rest of my time was alto-gether my own, to be devoted to either gether my own, to be devoted to either work or sleep as I pleased.

It was a threatening day in April—well I remember it—when I started out to walk to the great house where I was to carn my bread. As I walked on I began to dream. What future did this new land hold in reserve for me? I had not come to it with any idea of making a fortune—although a young man of 25, I had acquired enough common sense to save me from neh illusions-but only to earn a good living and lay up enough to enable me, when an old man, to return to France and sleep at last under the shadow of my own village spire. Soon I caught sight of the lofty chimney of the sugar mill—then the house itself, buried in a thick grove of mango trees, and, as I feared being late, I quickened my step. Under the veranda, already my step. Under the veranda, already crowded, I saw people rushing back and forward—running, and no one noticed me as I ascended the front steps except a big, fat negress, crouchng at the entrance, who solvbed and ried with renewed despair at my com-ng. There on the sofa, at full length, young girl-almost a child. Her bright hair, all streaming with water, fell over the back of the sofa, and had dripped upon the veranda until a little pool had formed upon the fags. She was whiter than a piece of marble; the violets of death were on her compressed lips; her lifeless arm lay rigidly straight by her side; and M Rabut, on his knees beside her, wa kissing one of her hands. "Drowned, my dear sir, she got drowned," said a good old lady of about 60 years of age, who came to me holding out her hand in the friendliest manner imaginable. "But you have walked here," she continued; "you must be tired. Of course you will take something, Myrtil!" "Mamma! Oh, mamma!" exclaimed M. Rabut, raising his head. 'You see,' he said to me, with a sob, 'you see, she was out bathing; the river sud-

"Myrtil! Myrtil!" sgain cried the good lady, "bring a glass of Madeira to the gentleman. Or perhaps you would prefer something else?"
I questioned the family. The girl had not been twenty minutes under water. And yet they had done nothg-had not even tried to do any I gave my orders briefly-they were beyed.

They had laid her on her back. I They had faid her on her back. I lifted her head so that it leaned side-ways on the left. Her teeth were clinched. How cold her lips scemed when I pressed my own upon them! The poor father, senseless with grief, allowed us to do as we thought best, and the recommendar walked berealth. and the grandmother walked hurriedly and the grandmother walked hurriedly to and fro, busy, fussy, always calling Myrtil, and declaring "the breakfast will never be ready, and here are all the people coming!" Half an hour had passed. What! was not that a flush we saw mounting to the colorless cheeks! Oh, how fervent a prayer be uttered that moment to the good God! And it seemed to me the arm I held had become less frigid. At that moment a horseman came up at

At that moment a horseman came up at full gallep.

"Myrtil! Myrtil! take the doctor's horse to the stable!" cried the good lady, descending the steps to meet the physician. "Ah, doctor, I knew it! Your powder could not do me any good. The whole night, doctor, I was in pain. Ah! how bally I slept!"

The doctor came directly to us.

"We are all right now—we shall get off with nothing worse than a fright! Why, you old coward, have I not already told you so? Here! let me see a happier face on you?" And he gave M. Rabut a vigorous slap on the shoulder.

Then suddenly turning to me, he asked: "But you—where are you from? 1 don't remember ever seeing you here before."

"I came from Brittany, doctor, by way of Paris and Port Louis."
"Look!—look!"—he had already turned his back upon me—"she is

'This is he, my Helene: if it hadn't been for him'—and his voice choked.

'Don't fret any more, papa. I am only sorry about my locket. Do you think they will ever be able to find it?"

The locket contained her mother's hair.

It was a great narrow basin, shut in by great jamroses, whose tufted branche met above and stretchest from on bank to the other. The pale light, flickering through the leaves, made gleams here and there upon the water like the reflection of molten lead; be-yond the darkness was complete; it coked perfectly black there. I dived and brought up three flat pebbles! But breakfast would not be ady until to o'clock; I had plenty of

By 8 o'clock the bottom of the basin had no mysteries for me. There was not a single cabot fish that I had not not a single cabot-fish that I had not disturbed beneath his rock—not a single camaron that I had not compelled to crawl backward into his hole. But the locket was not there—accordingly it must be farther down. I left the basin and followed the course of the stream—interogating all the roots, exploring all the boulders, questioning every tuff of grass. I was about to pass on when Law a little screent like a thin silk I saw a little scrpent, like a thin silk string caught upon the root of a wild

She opened the little box.

"My locket! my locket!" she cried, putting it to her lips and kissing it over and over again. I watched every kiss—I looked at her out of the corner of my eye. Finally her eyes met my own—she understood. But the little mysterious beauty didn't even say "Thank you."

mar, the business manager of the same journal, and Wm. P. Gray, the excaptain of the Capital City Guards, Company B. were the defendants. The complainant was James A. Perry, the new capitaln of Company B. The alleged libel consists of an article printed in the Alexante reflecting on Capitain Perry. All the parties are colored. The objectionable article concerned the factional fight in the solider company named. It states:

"On Monday, October 12, without the knowledge of forty-two members of that company, these eleven bolters held a meeting and went through the mockery of expelling me (meaning Capitain Gray), and electing J. A. Perry as capitain in my stead. Now, they have published that I have been expelled for misappropriating funds, yet they cleek as my successor James A. he expected to prove that Mr. Gray had the article written and Mr. Cromwell printed it in his paper.

Captain Perry denied under oath that he was ever expelled from the G. U. O. O. F. or that he ever related from the G. U. O. O. F. or that he ever related that arder of funds. As to the Cadet Corps he denied that he ever misappropriated their funds.

Editor Cromwell, one of the defendants, who is a member of the bar, appeared as counsel for Mr. Lemar.

On cross-examination Captain Perry said that he did not know that he had been expelled from the Cadet Corps. He said he was notified that he could not vote on matters of the company while he was in the company's debt. He gave them his notes for the amount and never paid them because they were never presented. He sent in his resignation of his own accord.

His Honor cut further proceedings short by stating to the counsel: "You must remember that you cannot prove the truthfulness of the article is not a sufficient justification. and "Much Ado About Nothing."

Interesting histories are attached to many of the articles, and this, it is expected, will prove an attraction to curiosity-seckers. The catalogue includes the lingomar dress, designed by Wingfield and made by Auguste, the Hamlet belt of the late Charles Fechter, the crown worn by Edmund Kean and also presented to McCullough by Boucleault, the Moorish yataghan presented by John E. Owens, the snuff-box presented by K. W. Ellison, the daggers presented by by Salvini and Forrest, the latter's Metamora rifle and Edwin Adams' combat sword. sword.
